TRACK DESCRIPTION

This track welcomes contributions on the integration of sustainability reporting and assurance into accounting and auditing education across Europe, exploring how universities and professional education providers translate regulatory requirements into meaningful learning outcomes. This track encourages studies on curriculum mapping, institutional barriers, and comparative analyses across national and professional contexts, as well as on competence frameworks aligned with the European Sustainability Reporting Standards (ESRS) and the assessment of sustainability knowledge, ethical reasoning, and professional scepticism. This track particularly welcomes research on teaching double materiality, stakeholder engagement, sustainability disclosures, and assurance evidence through experiential learning, simulations, interdisciplinary teaching, and research-informed case development. Contributions on digital reporting, data analytics, and artificial intelligence in sustainability education, on educator development and collaboration between universities and practice, and on the evaluation of educational interventions and the transfer of competencies into professional settings are of specific interest. Theoretical, empirical, and interdisciplinary approaches are all in scope.
