TRACK DESCRIPTION

This track welcomes contributions on the role of information systems and knowledge management in enabling and governing the twin digital and green transition in accounting, banking, and finance. This track encourages studies on artificial intelligence, advanced analytics, digital platforms, and information infrastructures for sustainability reporting, assurance, financial decision-making, risk management, and organisational learning. This track particularly welcomes research on ESG data governance, quality, traceability and interoperability, intellectual capital, sustainable FinTech, RegTech, SupTech, and climate-related and nature-related risk information systems. This track also invites work on algorithmic accountability, transparency, and the ethical and organisational implications of AI-supported decisions, examining how digital technologies interact with human expertise, knowledge, governance mechanisms, and institutional settings. Conceptual, empirical, experimental, design science, case-based, mixed-method, and interdisciplinary approaches are encouraged to critically assess opportunities, unintended consequences, and the organisational capabilities needed for credible and sustainable value creation.
